

Again

There is a language in this in the settling dust
Hardwood sighs beneath heels

You speak only in soft collisions now
Too busy reading the light as it bends across window sills
Counting hours in the sunlight even time wants to stay close to you

What are we if not residue if not fingertips fogging up glass
Something mouthed underwater vows folded in tide
All consonants and quiet...

All we are is what we leave behind
Hands tethered to worn-out wrists
Breath caught between hollow things

Intimate and ultimate.